Eating as Treatment

Dr Ben Britton has been conducting translational research in the Psycho-Oncology Service of the Consultation-Liaison Psychiatry Department at the hospital since 2005.

His main research interests combine the translation of evidence based psychological interventions, difficult to treat populations and novel areas of intervention.

Ben has recently been identified as a well-respected expert and valued professional in the area of head and neck cancer. As such, Ben has been invited to present at an advanced symposium for health professionals at the Princess Alexandra Hospital in June. The hospital is nationally recognised as a leader in research and clinical management of head and neck cancer patients.

Ben will update participants about the cutting edge innovations in clinical care and research in the area of head and neck cancer, particularly discussing 'EAT: Eating as Treatment.'
